President Joe Biden will travel to Pittsburgh, Pa., today, where he will give a speech on the economy. The visit is part of a larger tour that will also include stops in Cleveland and Columbus, Ohio, later in the week. During his speech, Biden is expected to discuss his administration's plans for creating new jobs and boosting the economy. The White House has also announced that a number of cabinet members will be attending the event, including Secretary of State Antony Blinken, Treasury Secretary Janet Yellen, and Commerce Secretary Gina Raimondo. The event will take place at the University of Pittsburgh, where the school's football team is ranked No. 11 in the nation. The game is scheduled to kick off at 12:30 p.m. ET. President Biden will also meet with Ohio Governor Mike DeWine later in the day, as they discuss efforts to combat the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic. The meeting is expected to focus on issues such as vaccine distribution and state-level economic policies. The White House has called on states to take additional steps to ensure widespread access to the vaccine. President Biden's speech is set to include updates on his administration's ongoing COVID-19 response efforts and plans for addressing climate change and other pressing issues. The event is expected to attract a significant level of media and public attention, with numerous news organizations confirming their attendance. A number of local news outlets have also indicated that they will be present at the event, including the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette and WESA Public Radio. The White House has said that those who attend will be asked to follow safety guidelines, including mask requirements and social distancing measures. The event is scheduled to conclude by 2:30 p.m. ET, after which President Biden will depart for Washington, D.C., for further meetings and events.
