Cow/Calf Clinic set Aug. 22 in Lampasas

The Texas A&M AgriLife Extension Service will conduct the multi-county Central Texas Cow/Calf Clinic and Cooking with Beef Boot Camp in Lampasas on Aug. 22 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at Grace Fellowship, 2974 U.S. Highway 281 South. The programs involve the AgriLife Extension offices in Lampasas, Burnet and Llano counties.

Reservations are required by calling the AgriLife Extension office in Lampasas County at 512-556-8271. Individual preregistration is $25 at the door.

"This joint program truly should have something for everyone interested in preparing or producing beef," said Heath Lusty, AgriLife Extension agent in Lampasas County.

"One of the morning breakout sessions will feature preparing beef for the family, while the other will deal with producing it. Both sessions will come together for an afternoon program on ranch estate planning."

Topics and speakers for the morning beef production clinic session include:

- Fall-winter health concerns, Dr. Jason Cleere, AgriLife Extension beef cattle specialist, College Station.
- Pasture, rangeland and forage insurance, Bill Thompson, AgriLife Extension economist, San Angelo.
- Grass-fed beef and niche markets, Dr. Rick Machen, AgriLife Extension livestock specialist, Uvalde.

The Boot Camp beef preparation session will include presentations on lean beef, cooking methods, recipe ideas and samples.

Both sessions will conclude with a beef lunch sponsored by the Texas Beef Council, followed by the estate planning session.

Three Texas Department of Agriculture continuing education units – two general, one integrated pest management – will be available to participants with a valid private pesticide applicators license.

For more information, contact Lusty at 512-556-8271, or rhlusty@ag.tamu.edu.

AHS, Metroplex take top technology award

Adventist Health System has been named the 2013 Most Wired Health System for excellence in Information Technology, and Metroplex Adventist Hospital, Killeen, shares this award.

The designation is based on the American Hospital Association's Health Care's Most Wired Survey conducted earlier this year which asked hospitals and health systems nationwide to answer questions regarding their information technology initiatives.

More than 1,700 hospitals -- roughly 30 percent of all U.S. hospitals -- completed the survey.

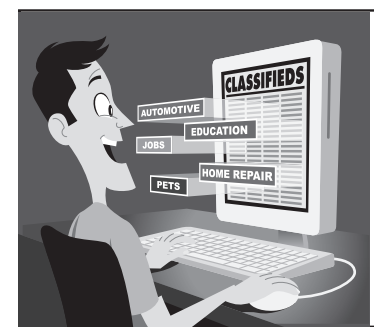

Most Wired survey winners had specific requirements in each of four focus areas including adopting technologies to improve patient documentation, implementing advanced clinical decision support and evidence-based protocols, reducing the likelihood of medication errors, and rapidly restoring access to data in the case of a disaster or outage.

"As a hospital for this community, it is important that as an organization we understand the importance of how information and technology will help to improve efficiency," said Carlyle Walton, president and CEO of Metroplex Health System.

"The goal is to ensure the care we give our patients is electronically connected and follows them wherever they may be -- whether that's in the hospital, a doctor's office or in their home."

This year marks the 15th anniversary of Health Care's Most Wired Survey. According to the AHA report, in that time, hospitals and health care systems have made great strides in establishing the basic building blocks for creating effective clinical information systems aimed at improving patient care.
